URBAN NATION Berlin Museum for Urban Contemporary Art is a non-profit, non-commercial institution for artists and a collection of contemporary art and architectural projects which have been working nationally and internationally since the foundation and based on the motto of the German Designer Gerd Weging in September 2013 and has been focusing on cultural activities since the opening of the museum in Berlin's cultural quarter in September 2017.

URBAN NATION wants to rethink the classical museum concept and tries to shape structures that are ready for a post and help shape the future of what a museum could be for Berlin generation and cities worldwide, says Young.

This is why the institution seeks ideas for beyond the museum's work, which is made together with other parts of the collection.
Projects including young urban contemporary artists and other young talents, large and international artists are invited to Berlin to create urban space together with the URBAN NATION project program, "Concrete Culture, Contemporary Urban Architecture" that share the mission of the museum as an important part of our work. Use that collaboration with Member for creating things that are important things in the global context, sharing and learning, and exchange between disciplines, interests and forms, and URBAN NATION is now in use. All artists under one roof.

These approaches target members of the museum's work. In September 2018 URBAN NATION will open its second floor with the exhibition "THE POWER OF ART AS A SOCIAL ARCHITECT".
